Sarah Kirton has a story from Sven-Erik about a young man who asked an old fiddler to teach him to play. The old man, wanting to determine whether he was serious, told him to go to Styggforsen (a waterfall near Boda) at midnight.

When the youth arrived, he heard this tune being played by the old man, who had hid himself there earlier. Convinced he was hearing Näcken, the water spirit, the youth fled.

Later the old man asked the young one whether he wanted those fiddle lessons, and the young man replied that he decided he didn't want to play after all.
